By the opening address of the President, we had presented to us The Relation which Sanitary Science bears to National Wealth. He showed us the importance of that science to a people in its national capacity. He showed how it reaches out and touches all the springs of national greatness, power, and health; and how absolutely necessary it is to the daily and continual welfare of a people. From the rim of a circle so great, enclosing within it everything that goes to make up what we call national interests, the work of the convention rapidly and justly narrowed, the papers and discussions gathering around points that more immediately concerned us as a community. All facts, lessons, and matters properly and fairly tributary to these subjects were brought before us and made to yield us instruction concerning the proper modes by which the general health of our city might be preserved. Then coming still nearer, our public schools come under examination, and the important subject of Hygiene as it affects the welfare of our children while taking on the culture needful to future usefulness, was brought before us. We were shown how these schools should be made to subserve the physical health as well as the intellectual progress of our children. Coming still closer, these doctors have with kindly voice and manners, as usual, but without a fee, as is very unusual, entered our homes and with the professors taught...
