Of course the instruments should be owned by the University. Were it otherwise a confusion of styles, shapes, and sounds would result, and with the graduation and departure of the player, there would be a corresponding loss of brass. The instruments should be uniform, and should remain here. Fifty cents given by each member of the University, would purchase an admirable set. which could be placed immediately in the hands of experienced players. University Day, Class Day, and other public days, would thus be supplied with music free of expense. It needs no great outlay of mathematical skill to discover that an hundred and fifty dollars saved on a few such days would pay for the It has not been customary generally we believe, at the close of the sophomore and junior years, just before separating for the long vacation, to have a social reunion. But there is no reason why we should receive the benefit of this excellent custom in the freshman year only. After longer and closer companionship we have become much better qualified to enjoy a social evening together; we have a richer college experience; more strange adventures to relate, and a warmer fellow feeling to give freedom, life, and zest to all. Nothing is better calculated to dispel these disagreeable jealousies and petty...
