Excerpt: . . . of one hundred millions; it would be found that taxation there would be as great as it is here. The share which the people are said to have in the government, next demands a few words; for, of all the cheats that impose on the deluded people of this country, this surely is the greatest. I grant that throughout the union, the right of voting, in the first instance, is nearly universal. But, in chusing the members of congress, so many are the different modes of election that, in some states, the people have no voice at all. The members of the senate (which answers to our house of lords, ) arc all nominated by the representative bodies of the Arthur Young. different states; and the house of representatives are generally chosen by tickets. If a state sends thirteen members, the leading men of the two parties (democrats and federalists) name each thirteen men, which is called the democratic and federal ticket, --and the voters must vote for one or other of these sets of men; whatever objections they may have to all, or any of them. Thus the cities of America have not the opportunity of sending an inhabitant of their own town, whom they have had an opportunity of knowing and proving; but they are obliged;to elect from persons, that a set of men (perhaps two or three at the most) may choose to name to them; and all the right they...
