Excerpt: . tame too, and would come towards the shore as soon as they saw a party of children there. But it was dangerous to tease them. One, the biggest of all, once drowned a dog. It was a little brown dog that barked at the little swans, and tried very hard to bite them. The swan sailed angrily up, suddenly caught it by the neck, dragged it into the water, and held dead, and then Poor little doggy! I don t think I ever quite liked this cruel, majestic, white, long-necked creature after that. In the park, too, were many other kinds of birds delighting in their freedom as they swept upwards on outspread wings towards the soft, silvery, and pearly-white clouds that looked like islands of snow in a deep blue sea, or downward towards their nests in the tops of the tall...
